JOHN BAUDIS, OF SCOTIA, ENDS LIFE WITH GUN

Was Despondent Over Poor Business at Williamsport.

HAD TRIED IT BEFORE

Attempted Suicide Several Years Ago—Met With Business Reverses While Operating Merry-Go-Round—Wife Claims Body.

While despondent, due supposedly to poor receipts from his business, John G. Baudis, until several years ago a farmer at Scotia, shot and killed himself at Williamsport, on Sunday evening, last. Baudis operated a merry-go-round and at times had his machine at Hecla Park. Telling the story of the suicide of Baudis and what prompted him to take his life, the Williamsport "Gazette and Bulletin", on Monday published the following:

Love of the home life on his little hillside farm in Center county which he was forced to leave five years ago to take up the wandering life of a showman was the primary cause for John G. Baudis, the merry-go-round owner, to shoot himself Sunday night while seated in his tent at the South Side carnival grounds.

Baudis was homesick. And homesickness—the army surgeons call it nostalgia when a soldier in the Phillipines suddenly goes mad and ends it all—coming in the extreme form that attacked Baudis means melancholia, ending a rule in self-inflicted death. One year after Baudis left his farm to take out a merry-go-round he attempted to kill himself while showing in Bellefonte. At that time he took laudanum, and it was only through the prompt efforts of physicans that his life was saved. Baudis knew when he wrote that farewell note to his wife what his trouble was, although he expressed himself in rather crude language. The sentence that stands most prominently in the last letter of the despairing man reads: "I guess this is the end of it, it must come, I have told you right a long this damn M. G. R. will kill me."

"This damn M. G. R." meaning merry-go-round, expressed the humble showman's abhorence of the life that he was leading. This is further borne out by his wife, who came from the little farm near Benore, Center county, yesterday, to claim the body. Seated outside the tent in which her husband met his tragic end, Mrs. Baudis, thin, wan and wasted with the grip of consumption on her, presented a most pitiful sight. Between sobs she told the miserable story of the events that led to her husband deserting the farm for the life of a showman.

"He loved his family and his farm," said Mrs. Baudis, "but five years ago times became so hard that John looked around for some other means to bring us in money. He was convinced that he could make money running a merry-go-round and finally bought one. Only a year after he started in the business he grew despondent and tried to kill himself, while in Bellefonte.

"This year when it came time to go on the road he was more despondent than ever and I told him to stay at home, but he decided that he would have a good season and would not remain. I'll never forget the day he last left the farm. He went out in the barnyard and looked over his chickens, hogs and two cows. When he came back to the kitchen there were tears in his eyes.

" 'I hate to leave all this, mother,' he said. That was all, but I knew that he was heartsick and tired of the struggle he was making."

Mrs. Baudis made arrangements yesterday to take the body of her husband back to their home. She has a son in Canada and wrote him to come to the states and take charge of the property of the dead showman. She has had offers for the merry-go-round, but will not make any disposition of it until her son arrives. Bert Delige, the negro in charge of the engine, had been with Baudis for several years and he has taken good care of the effects in the tent since the tragedy. Mrs. Baudis seems to trust him and he and Alva Fetters, who is also connected with the carousal, will take care of it for her until other disposition of the property is made.

Blasting Irritated Elephants.

When the Robbins circus was in Bellefonte, on Thursday, last, the keeper of the animals observed that the two elephants were more or less excited and irritated and for some time they were unable to discover the cause. During the afternoon, and while the circus was under way, the larger of the elephants became quite restless and was only subdued by the sharp prodding of the trainer's stick. It seemed that the elephants were quartered but a short distance from the limestone quarries, where there was considerable blasting done during the day. Each blast worried the elephants and it was not until evening that they quieted down.

Sale of Court House Furnishings.

On Saturday last the County Commissioners auctioned off all the old furnishings of the Court House. The sale netted upward $250. The Court House tower clock was was sold to the borough of Philipsburg for $10. Most of the piping and junk was disposed of to Peter Mendis, while a great many citizens purchased desks and chairs at bargain prices. All the new furnishing of the Court House is fire proof, the new desks and chairs being made of wrought iron.

Burned by Gasoline.

While cleaning a dress with gasoline, George Sunday, the popular tailor, was severely burned about the arms and chest on Tuesday morning last. A spark fell from the chimney on the dress with the result that there was a sharp explosion of the gasoline. Mr Sunday's arms were very badly burned, while his neck, chest and face were scorched.

CONTEST TO SHOW BOYS HOW TO JUDGE STOCK

Will Be Feature of Third Annual State College Horse Show

AWARD THREE PRIZES

Any Young Man in Centre County May Enter the Contest—Expert Judges Also to Participate and Later Compare Notes.

A stock judging contest, with Centre County boys as judges, will be one of the big features of the third annual State College horse show, which will be held at State College on Wednesday, October 19. The purpose of the contest is to educate young men in the county in judging the value of horses.

Three class of horses will be judged; heavy draught, light draught and harness. Three prizes will be awarded. As an additional attraction, and especially for the young folks, there will be an exhibition of ponies, ridden by their owners.

In order to qualify for the show, all horses must be driven or handled by the owner, a member of his family, or someone regularly employed by him, and must have been in the hands of the present owner since July 1. Not more than five entries may be made by anyone person or firm, and no animal can be entered in more than one class.

The following rules and regulations will govern the stock judging contest:

Any boy living within fifteen miles of State College, not under fifteen years of age or over twenty years, may enter the contest, provided that he has never been classified as a student in an Agricuitural College.

All contestants must report to the Secretary of the Horse Show not later than 9 A. M., October 19, 1910 in Room 205, Agricultural Building.

Application should be made by the Secretary before October 1, 1910, who will issue a blank form to be filled out and returned to him. Upon receipt of this form properly filled out, a ticket will be issued to the applicant which will admit him free to the horse show.

Each applicant will be given an entry number by which he will be designated throughout the contest.

Satisfactory classes of horses will be provided for the contest by the Horse Show Committee. These animals will not meet in regular competition in the Horse Show until after the boys have passed upon them. Each contestant will be required to judge one ring of heavy draft horses, one ring of medium draft horses and one ring of light harness horses.

All contestants will be allowed thirty minutes to place and write reasons substantiating their judgment on each class of stock.

Regular forms will be given each contestant on which to make written report. The forms will be provided with numbers to distinguish them. Any contestant writing his name or any other identifying mark on written report will be excluded from the contest.

Text books, note books, score cards and other data shall not be used. Contestants will not be allowed to converse among themselves or with others before the classes are passed upon.

Each contestant will be required to write his decision, placing the first three animals and giving his reasons.

All contestants' reports on different classes will be graded on the basis of 100 points for each class.

After all papers are turned in to the Superintendent of the contest an expert judger will place each class and give his reasons for his decision, in order that each boy may have an opportunity to know why he either failed or succeeded. The various papers will be graded by a committee of judges who shall report the total score of each individual to the Superintendent who will announce the result to each contestant as soon as possible after it has been given him.

Fine Band Concert.

The City band gave a fine open air concert in front of the Bush House on Tuesday evening. Each appearence of the band shows the result of the recent practice and already it is showing upas one of the best amateur musical organizations in the central part of the State.

School Dedication Postponed.

The proposed dedication of the new High School building, in Bellefonte, has been postponed until some time in September. This is owing to the fact that the men desired to address the public are away on their vacation. The public will be given ample notice of the date of the dedication.

COMPANY E OF OLD 45TH TO HAVE FINE MONUMENT

To Hold 49th Annual Reunion at Baileyville Picnic.

DEDICATION IN 1911

But Handful Survive of the Boys who Enlisted from Ferguson and Half-Moon Townships—Were Brave and Gallant Soldiers.

On Saturday, next, the survivors of Company E, 45th Pennsylvania Volunteers, will hold their forty-ninth annual reunion at Baileyville. To those who will not be there, or who do not know the story of this gallant company, it might be supposed that the reunion will be participated in by a large number of men.

Such is not the case. A meagre handful of men, who may be counted almost on the fingers of your two hands, constitute the survivors of the gallant band of heroes who left their homes at Baileyville and vicinity and marched to the front in defense of their country. Of the two hundred or more to go to the front there were many who never returned and who today lie sleeping in a dozen or more States.

The little handful of survivors, who have planned the forty-ninth reunion for Saturday next, which is the time for the annual Baileyville picnic, are arranging to build a monument to the memory of their fallen comrades. It is their hope that the work may be finished in another year. It will if they can have it so. Meanwhile they are at work raising funds and at Saturday's reunion a lunch will be served as the first step toward collecting the nucleus of what is intended to be a purse of $1,000. It is believed that the monument will cost about the latter sum. If the plans in hand materialize the proposed monument will be dedicated at the annual reunion in 1911. It is planned to have the name of every member of the old company placed on the monument. It must not be supposed that the few survivors of Company E, are able financially to give $1,000 for the monument. There is not one of the number but who would cheerfully go down into his pocket and contribute the entire amount were he but able to do so. As it is, a part of the cost must be defrayed by the citizens of Baileyville. Home pride and appreciation of the services of Company E, makes certain the success of raising the necessary funds long before the monument is completed.

To every man or woman or child who contributes a mite toward the monument fund there will be the knowledge that it is in honor of some of the bravest boys who ever wore the blue. The story of Company E, is one that goes straight to the heart of every true American. It is a story to which Centre County may always point with pride.

Scarcely had the clouds of smoke cleared away from the fall of Fort Sumpter when a citizens' meeting was called at Baileyville. One hundred young men, with brawny arms and hands and hearts fired with patriotic loyalty promptly enlisted. Henry Stevens, who had seen service under General Scott, in Mexico, was chosen captain; J. Oliver Campbell, first lieutenant; John Irvin, second lieutenant, and Armstrong Bailey, orderly sergeant. The company were known as the Scott Guards and were equipped and uniformed in readiness for war. They tendered their services with the Reserves, but were refused. With the second call for troops, however, they were accepted and moved to Harrisburg. While at Camp Curtin, then in command of Colonel Thomas Welsh, who also had seen service in Mexico, and who was organizing a regiment for his own command, at once recognized his old friend in arms, Captain Stevens, with his splendid company of loyal young Americans. He at once selected it as the color company, designating it Company E. The company was immediately sworn into service for the United States and received "Old Glory" from the hands of Governor Curtin, who in presenting it said that he felt certain it would never be trailed in the dust, nor captured. Today it proudly rests in the Archives, at Harrisburg. It waved in every important State, was flaunted in 34 engagements and was carried over 13,000 miles.

At Knoxville it proudly fluttered to the breeze, tantalizing the Johnnies and General Longstreet, who held the boys in blue under siege for six long weeks, with nothing to eat but corn ears and mule meat. Their clothing and shoes were worn out. Many of the boys made sandals of raw beef or mule hides, until

STILL IN THIRD PLACE

Bellefonte Loses Second Game to Osceola; Clearfield Wins.

Bellefonte yesterday lost to Osceola, 2—0, and Clearfield won from Philipsburg, 3—0. Bellefonte is thus forced back into third place. For one brief day Bellefonte led Clearfield for second place, but yesterday's results changed the order of things. Osceola continues to head the Mountain League, and with a comfortable margin.

Osceola	20	11	645
Clearfield	14	11	560
Bellefonte	15	13	536
Philipsburg	7	21	250

Monday's game furnished all the excitement the fans could wish for, although it was Bellefonte's game from start to finish. Two of the Osceola players made themselves objectionable and had to be removed from the field by Chief of Policeman Dukeman. Both men were ruled off by the umpire. On a number of occasions the Osceola players delayed the game by noisy objections to the umpire's decisions. The game concluded, 6—5, in favor of Bellefonte. On the same day Clearfield was defeated by Philipsburg, 7—6, in a fourteen inning game. It is understood that Clearfield has protested the game.

There have been several changes on the Bellefonte team since the defeat on "Booster Day" by Clearfield. Bean, who played short, has left town, and Todd has replaced Dillen at centre. Beatty, who played second, has been transferred to short, while O'Brien, recently with Clearfield, has been placed at second.

MARTIN FAUBLE IS DEAD WAS SPLENDID CITIZEN

Succumbs to Heart Failure at His Home Here Yesterday.

SUCCESSFUL MERCHANT

By His Strong Personality and Rigid Adherence to Fair Dealing He Won a Proud Position in Business Circles—Funeral on Friday.

A death mourned by many friends was that of Martin Fauble, well known merchant and a prominent citizen, who passed away at his home on East High Street, yesterday morning at 8:30 o'clock. Mr. Fauble had been in poor health for several weeks, due to a gradual hardening of the arteries of the heart. At times he would be very weak, only to rally and appear to be much stronger. On Monday, however, his condition was critical and the several members of the family were summoned to his bedside.

The funeral will be held on Friday morning, at 10.30 o'clock. Interment will be at the Jewish cemetery.

The deceased was for years one of the leading business men of Bellefonte. He was born near Hamburg, Germany, Dec. 22, 1844, and came to this country in 1860. For a time he worked on the railroad and then he and Aaron Baum, a brother of Abraham Baum, were engaged in traveling about, selling goods. Later he clerked in the store of Adolph and Simon Loeb. Opening a store at the location of Knisely's pool room and cigar store, Mr. Fauble eventually branched out in business for himself. From the start he was successful and soon larger quarters were needed, when he removed his stock to the present Fauble store in the Brockerhoff block, where he continued in business the last 17 years.

A splendid man and a good citizen Mr. Fauble identified himself with every project planned for the advancement and growth of Bellefonte. Modest and unassuming, he won for himself the confidence and esteem of a wide circle of friends. A short time ago he was elected a director of the First National Bank, of Bellefonte.

Mr. Fauble was married to Miss Bena Loeb, who survives, with the following children: Adolph, Joseph, Mrs. William Seel, of Harrisburg; Mrs. William W. Schloss, of Philadelphia, and Mabel and Rosa, at home.

ADAM LEVER FLEGAL.

Adam Lever Flegal, one of our oldest and most highly esteemed residents, whose condition the past two weeks and over had given his friends so much concern, passed away on Friday, last. His death was the result of Bright's disease and other complications, including bronchitis, with which he had been afflicted for years. The deceased was born in Philipsburg on June 17, 1828, making his age 82 years, 1 month and 26 days. He was the son of Rev. John Flegal, an old Methodist minister and one of Philipsburg's pioneers, and the father of twelve children. The deceased moved with his father to Clearfield when about 15 years of age. He followed farming for some years, previous to which he carried on the clothing business in Clearfield. He also served a term as treasurer of Clearfield county and held other offices, being a life-long Democrat. He returned to Philipsburg about five years ago.

In December, 1855, he was married to Miss Ellen Draucker, of Luthersburg, to whom seven children were born. She survives, together with the following children: Blanche, wife of Dr. Samuel Stewart, of Clearfield; Alice, Mary and Harry, this city, the latter being in the Wills Eye hospital at this time suffering with an injury to one of his eyes. He also leaves two sisters, Mrs. Josephine Hoop, this city and Mrs. Louise Atherton, of Philadelphia.—Philipsburg Jonrnal.

MRS. FRED ROTE.

Just at midnight on Sunday night, the spirit life of Mrs. Fred Rote passed into the eternal world. Mrs. Rote became ill on Saturday night with internal hemorrhages and she was hastened to the Altoona hospital where her life passed away at the above mentioned time. Mrs. Rote's maiden name was Miss Sadie Steele. She was born at Martha Furnace September 10, 1887 and was aged 22 years, 4 months and 4 days. About eleven years ago she moved with her parents to Tyrone and has resided here ever since. She was a splendid woman in every sense of the word. In her home she was a good wife and mother and a friend to everyone in the neighborhood. Her home life was all that a good wife and mother could make it and her going away has left a vacancy that can never

PHILA. RECORD ABSOLVES SENATOR BOIES PENROSE

Admits Republican Leader Had No Hand in Munson Fiasco.

BODY BLOW FOR BERRY

Leading Democratic Newspaper in Pennsylvania, and Ally of Gibboney in Many Campaigns, Declares Against Keystone Party.

A ludicrous phase of the gubernatorial campaign in Pennsylvania is the shifting about of the leading Democratic newspapers. The Philadelphia "Record", on the day following the recent Allentown State convention, denounced Cyrus LaRue Munson for his eleventh hour declination of the nomination for Governor. At the same time the "Record" made the statement that Senator Penrose, the Republican leader, had in reality dominated the Democratic convention. Other Democratic newspapers took up this allegation, supported by nothing but the mere statement in the "Record." It was used as one of the chief reasons for organizing the so-called "Keystone Party."

Now comes forward the "Record", with a special article by John P. Dwyer, its managing editor, absolving Senator Penrose from any connection, whatever, with the Allentown convention. The same article professes to explain Mr. Munson's fiasco and in an editorial in the same issue comes out point blank for Mr. Grim for Governer in preference to Mr. Berry.

The "Record's" article, which explains that it is semi-official and authoritative, places in a most peculiar position those newspapers which have been asserting that Senator Penrose had managed both the Republican and Democratic conventions. After relating efforts made earlier in the campaign to reorganize the Democratic party in the State and how this led to the virtual slating of Munson for Governor, the "Record" article says:

The facts of the Munson fiasco, so far as they were supposed to discreditably involve any one prominent in the Democratic organization, are now known. Painstaking investigation has been made. Nothing has been taken for granted, and all of the circumstantial evidence pointing to duplicity and double-dealing and involving one or more Democrats present at Allentown during convention week, has been proven to be worthless as a means of connecting the Democratic leaders in question with the nnexpected declination of Mr Munson on the eve of the Democratic State Convention. If Mr. Munson was involved in any deal and impelled by any reasons other than those he has publicly stated for his action, it was not with the knowledge of any member of the Democratic organization, and none of whom were in any way responsible for the panic into which the delegates to the Allentown Convention were thrown on the eve of the gathering.

Immediately following the primary elections when it became known that the efforts of Berry and Grim to capture a majority of the delegates to the State Convention had failed, formal pledges of enough delegates to nominate Mr. Munson were made to the Williamsport man. He was given these pledges and assured of the support not only of Colonel Guffey, Senator Hall, Chas. P. Donnelly and their friends, but many other Democrats who had long been known as being out of harmony with the Guffey organization without the request of a single pledge involving the conduct of the campaign or the office of Governor should he win the election. His nomination was assured, and he was consulted regarding the platform on which he was to make the campaign, responding with a series of planks covering questions of State government.

The impression that Mr. Munson was a politician was never justified. He was not. He was a good mixer and an effective personal campaigner, but with little or no knowledge of larger than county politics except that obtained in his canvass of the State in 1909.

The week before the Allentown Convention Munson was impressed by an interview credited to ex-State Treasurer Berry, in which the latter was quoted as stating that if he did not get the Democratic nomination for Governor he would run as an independent candidate. That worried Munson. He figured that it was useless for him to take the Democratic nomination if Berry ran independently, as that would divide the Democratic and independent vote, and insure the election of the Penrose candidate.

And so Mr. Munson decided to play politics. He came to Philadelphia and conferred with Mr. Berry's manager, Mr. Bonniwell, urging that gentleman to get his man to stop running for Governor, and consent to accept a place on the Democratic ticket for Lieutenant Governor. Mr. Bonniwell doubted Mr. Munson's ability to get Mr. Berry the nomination for Lieutenant Governor, but Mr. Munson said he would try.

Senator Hall, of Elk, was in Philadelphia, and Mr. Munson conferred with him, pleading that Mr. Berry be slated for Lieutenant-Governor. Senator Hall refused to agree to such a proposition. He said that nothing was agreed on except that Munson was to be nominated for governor, and it would be up to the Allentown Convention to decide upon the balance of the ticket. Mr. Munson appeared to assume that Senator Hall could handle the office any way he wanted, and threatened to refuse to accept the nomination for Governor if Senator Hall would not agree to favor Berry for Lieutenant-Governor.

To this Hall replied that Munson did not dare take such a step, that the delegates had been elected and he had promised to accept if nominated, and that he could not get out of the race on the pretext that he would not run if Berry was not on the ticket with him as the candidate for Lieutenant-Governor.

Mr. Munson was much wrought up over the situation. The weather was hot, and shortly after the interview with Senator Hall and while on his way to a train he was attacked with vertigo, and became so dizzy that he had to be helped to his seat in a parlor car. His illness continued and did not respond readily to the treatment of a Williamsport physician. He left Philadelphia after this conference with Senator Hall on the Thursday previous to the Allentown Convention.

On the following Sunday he again met Senator Hall by appointment at Atlantic City and informed him that the condition of his health worried him; that in addition some private affairs had taken a turn that made it inadvisable for him to continue in politics, and he wished to be relieved of his promise to accept the Democratic nomination for Governor. He asked Hall to acquiesce in this decision and look elsewhere for a candidate for Governor.

Senator Had positively declined to be a party to any such arrangement, and urged Mr. Munson to hold fast to his original position—that if nominated he would accept the Democratic nomination for Governor.

Mr. Munson persisted and Senator Hall insisted that it was unfair to the Democrats of the State that Mr. Munson should think of declining at that late date. He told him he was unnecesarily alarmed about his health and that he would be all right after a few weeks' rest.

At this point in the interview a close relative of Mr. Munson's, who had been present during the interview, appealed to Senator Hall to accept the declination of Mr. Munson, urging that to force him to make the campaign for Governor was driving him to the gave, the claim being made by the person, who was in a position to know, that it was a fact that Mr. Munson's physical condition was such that any undue excitement was likely to result fatally.

Senator Hall finally agreed that if this was true it was a valid excuse for the position Mr. Munson sought to assume, but stated that it was his judgment that Mr. Munson could not afford to take it without consulting one of the best-known physicians in the country and having him certify after an examination that it would jeopardize his life to make the campaign for the Governorship.

Mr. Munson agreed to this, and Senator Hall parted with him with the understanding that he was to go to Allentown on Monday while Munson was to visit Dr. Musser in Philadelphia, and communicate the result of the medical examination to Hall at Allentown on Tuesday morning, and that failing to secure the physician's certificate justifying his position he would accept the nomination for Governor.

Mr. Munson visited Dr. Musser on Monday afternoon of convention week, with the result already known that he advised him that his condition was such that it would be dangerous for him to engage in any work involving great effort or excitement.

Mr. Munson reached Williamsport on Monday evening. He immediately wrote and mailed to N. M. Edwards, who was in Allentown, the letter declining the nomination as well as a brief note to Senator Hall telling him to see Mr. Edwards who would show him the letter fully explaning his position.

Senator Hall received his short note from Munson early Tuesday morning. He immediately sought Edwards, who declared he had received no letter. Repeatedly during the day Hall sought Edwards, and as repeatedly Edwards visited the hotel desk and the post office inquiring for the expected letter. Edwards was in thorough ignorance of the contents of the letter, and although he was supposed to be Munson's closest political friend, had received no information of the attitude assumed by Munson.

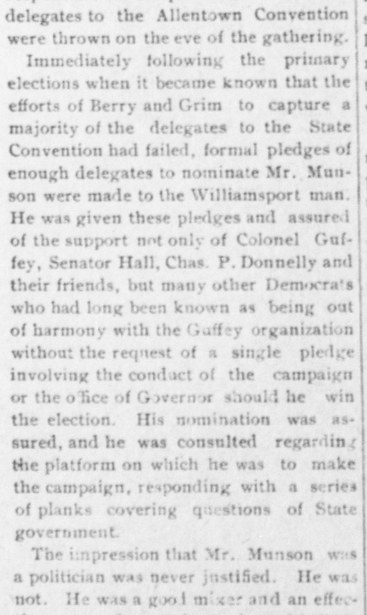
Late on Tuesday evening a clerk in the Allentown hotel at which Edwards was stopping discovered that there was a letter for Edwards, that the letter had been there all day, but that another clerk had misplaced it in the letter case, which accounted for the fact that it was not delivered earlier.

The rest is history. Panic followed in the ranks of the leaders and their friends. Futile efforts, which consumed several hours, were made through the telephone to induce Munson to recall his letter of declination. It was midnight of the day before the convention when this effort was abandoned because Munson persisted in his refusal to run, and the hasty decision of the Democrats who favored Munson to turn to Grim and nominate him was made.

As stated it was close to midnight on the day before the Allentown convention when the final word was received from Munson that he would not accept the nomination. His letter to N. M. Edwards had been presented to the party leaders shortly after six o'clock, the intervening time until close to midnight, being consumed in personal appeals over the telephone to Munson, to withdraw the letter, Colonel Guffey, Senator Dewalt, Chas. P. Donnelly and all of the other leaders on the ground participating in this fruitless effort.

Shortly before midnight there was a conference in Colonel Guffey's room. It was participated in not only by the close friends of Colonel Guffey, who had long been identified with his control of the Democratic organization, but by a number of others. Chas. P. Donnelly, of Philadelphia, suggested Congressman Palmer, of Stroudsburg, as the candidate for Governor and practically every man present agreed that he should be urged to take the place. Mr. Palmer, however, when urged, pointed to the fact that he was already a candidate for re-election to Congress and would not consent to run for Governor. Other names were canvassed, including those of both Berry and Grim. Of all the others considered none was at or near Allentown and it being doubtful that any of them would accept and the convention being only a few hours off the choice finally narrowed down to Berry and Grim, both of whom were candidates and both being in Allentown. Several present who had been opposed to the nomination of Berry suggested taking him, urging that this plan would remove the natural suspicion so apparent under all of the circumstances, that the name of Munson had only been used to trick the voters and that his nomination was never seriously considered by Colonel Guffey and his friends.

Cononel Guffey was inclined to agree to this and said he would if the others took the same view. They did not. Discussion followed of the original objection to Berry on account of the stories of his financial transactions with Colonel Guffey and the Harrisbnrg Trust Company while filing the office of State Treasurer, and it was finally decided to urge the nomination of Senator Grim, who was not present during any part of the discussion and who did not know of the decision reached until after it had been made.



Not Patented.

An ingenious invention for boiling coffee has recently been put upon the market. It whistles when the beverage is ready, and, in fact, does all but speak and ask to be drunk from. We take this opportunity of announcing that we have several attractive ideas of the kind up our sleeve. For instance, we expect a large demand for our new eggophone (provisionally protected), which starts crowing as soon as the boiling period is passed. We have great hopes, also, for the reveile frying pan, which, when the rasher is done to a turn, emits heart-rending squeals, and keeps on till the most leisurely oversleeper is forced to spring from his bed to save his bacon. Our train-catching teapot can be timed to explode at the precise moment when its owner ought to leave for the railway station. We have a muffineer, too, that rings its own bell if it thinks its contents are turning chilly. In short, we can promise some cherry society for the solitary bachelor. Punch.

Definition of Grass Widow.

This story is told in the Macon Herald of the late Bishop W. W. Duncan of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

When Bishop Duncan first went to Texas to preside at a conference there he was suffering severely with hay fever. He was of a nervous disposition and referred to his malady with such frequence that it became a bit tiresome to the preachers. A brother got up to make a report, and in the course of it he used the term "grass widow."

"Grass widow!" cried the bishop. "I've heard that expression used half a dozen times since I've been here. I never heard it before. Will you please tell me, sir, what a grass widow is?

The offending brother looked as calm and as serious as an undertaker during the storm of laughter which the bishop's speech had developed. When things quieted down he said, very gently!

"A grass widow, bishop, is a woman whose husband has died with hay fever.

Was a Good Circus.

It is but relating the truth to say that Robbins' circus, which exhibited here on Thursday, last, was the best show of its size that has been in Bellefonte in many years. From one end of the program to the other everything was clean and every thing which was done was well done. The time of the spectators was not taken up with a few attractions well done and a large number poorly done. There were fewer numbers, but each was in the hands of an experienced and capable actor, with the result that the large crowd in attendance was very well pleased with the entertainment. The exhibition of bareback riding and trained horses were especially pleasing. The clowns—and there were a half dozen of them—was always present at the right time to keep things stirred up and interest the children. Knowing the value of this time-honored feature of a circus, the Robbins show presented some of the best and funniest clowns that have ever appeared under the canvas in Bellefonte. Taken as a whole, it was a very much better circus than ordinarily happens along in the course of a season.

Oriental Eyes.

Compared with the dark, quiet eyes of these Orientals, the eyes of European or American women are restless, perturbed full of disquietude, as though, while they have won enfranchisement, they have lost a secret inspiration; something that they miss and seek, without quite understanding what it is; something that remains unfound. And with the still, selfish serenity of the Asian woman goes a degree of power we hardly credit or understand. I read the other day the the declaration of a Latin woman, who said that women of the Anglo-Saxon and Teutonic races do not know how to manage men; the women of the Latin races, on the contrary, do know how to manage men. But it seems to me that the women of the Orient, whether in India, China or Japan, or among the Moslem peoples, may have a finer and deeper secret still, wielding a far greater influence, because they do not seek to wield any influence at all.—Harper's Magazine.

Health and Beauty Hints.

A slight massage with the rotary motion should be given the face at least once a day, preferably twice.

The work consists merely in rubbing in a circle with the finger tips over the cheeks, temples and forehead sufficienty to stimulate circulation.

This serves to keep the tissues in healthy condition and will freshen the color.

A scald is one of the most painful injuries. One of the best healing remedies is made by beating castor oil and white of egg together until a cream is formed.

Cleanliness In Persia.

The Persian spends hours in the "hammams" (Turkish baths), which are very handsome buildings decorated with tiles and embellished with numerous exhortations as to the value of cleanliness. The smallest village in Persia has its "hammam," and bathing is almost a religious function. When the hot room and massage are finished the Persian is shaved, and the whole top of his head is likewise shaved, though the hair over the ears is left and allowed to grow down to the neck. This strange coiffure has a religious meaning, for the two locks on each side of the head are meant for the angel of death to hold when he carries the believer to paradise. All Persians dye their hair with a mixture of henna and vesmeh, and the hair dyeing is the last part of the bath, but tea and smoking are indulged in afterward, and the frequenters of the "hammams" find them very pleasant lounging places.—Chicago Journal.

A Whale's Breathing.

An eminent naturalist says concerning the breathing apparatus of the whale: "The windpipe does not communicate with the mouth. A hole is, as it were, bored right through the back of the head. Engineers would do well to copy the action of the valve of the whale's blowhole. A more perfect piece of structure it is impossible to imagine. Day and night, asleep or awake, the whale works its breathing apparatus in such a manner that not a drop of water ever gets down into the lungs. Again, the whale must of necessity stay a much longer period under water than seals. This alone might possibly drown him, as the lungs cannot have access to fresh air. We find that this difficulty has been anticipated and obviated by a peculiar reservoir in the venous system, which reservoir is situated at the back of the lungs."

Is the Universe Running Down?

It is absolutely certain that the machinery of the solar system is running down. The earth, with its mass of three thousand trillion tons, moving through space a thousand times faster than the express train goes, is being retarded by the friction of the atmosphere and tides to the extent that it loses about an hour in 16,000 years, a very slow process, it would seem, but one that will inevitably bring the earth to a standstill ultimately. And what is true of the earth is true of all the worlds and suns. Sir Isaac Newton maintained that the motions of all bodies in space suffer retardation and that their velocity is steadily becoming less and will finally cease. Solar systems, like everything else, have their time to be born and their time to die.—New York American.

To Clean Parasols.

Do not remove the cover from the frame to launder your parasol. Instead, open it out and wash the covering thoroughly, using brush, cool water and some good white soap. After rinsing set it in the sun to dry, if the material is in white; in the shade, if the material will fade. The wire frame will not rust, and your parasol will be found beautifully clean and dainty. It is well to wash it again in this manner in the fall, and not put it away in a soiled condition. Wrap it in tissue paper, then newspaper.—Woman's Home Companion.

Epilepsy, Fits

Convulsions, or Spasms and St. Vitus' Dance are Nervous Diseases. Most cases can be cured by strengthening and building up the nervous system. To do this a nerve medicine is needed. Dr. Miles' Nervine will be found efficacious and satisfactory. It has cured many cases of these diseases and we believe it will cure you. We can give you names of many who have been cured through its use. Write for advice.

"My son John had epilepsy for years, and after having him treated by specialists for over 2 years he still continued to have spells. I had almost given up in despair, but knowing the virtue of Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills for sick headache, I concluded to try the Nervine. During June, 1906, I gave him a teaspoonful three times a day, then in July I gave it as directed, and I could see that he was improving, and he has not had a spell since August 28, 1906, and has taken no medicine since Jan.-07. I am writing the case just as it is hoping it will induce others to try it."

PLOW TURNS 20 ACRES DAILY

Maryland Farmer Has Big Steam Monster With Six Shares.

An innovation in agricultural methods in Caroline county, Maryland has been introduced in Tuckaboe Neck by Aaron C. Reber, owner of the Emerson farm, on the road between Denton and Hillsboro. Mr. Reber brought from the West a steam plow, with six shares, and drawn by a 20-horsepower engine, and last week plowed a large field of fallow land, which is to be put in wheat this fall.

One of the reasons leading Mr. Reber to adopt Dakota methods in Maryland was that the drought has made the fallow land so dry that it was not thought expedient to plow it with horses, as their strength was not sufficient to turn the heavy sod. The experimenter says that land plowed in such a dry condition is more easily pulverized and more productive than when turned in a wet state. By steam plowing, the six plows can turn 20 acres a day, while with horses the average per plow is not over two acres a day. Three men operated the steam plow, as against six required by the ordinary plan.

Mr. Reber is a native of Pennsylvania, and two years ago bought the Emerson farm for $17,000. It was on this farm, in the early sixties, that the first wheat-threshing machine operated by steam was used in this county. The late Captain Robert R. Emerson, then living on the property, purchased the thresher, and farmers from all over the peninsula came here to see it work.

Charity Soup.

An editor was talking in San Francisco about Jim Jeffries.

"Jim was a little crusty when he started training," said the editor. "He hated the idea, you know, of removing all that fat. He hated the weeks of self-denial and abstinence that lay before him.

"Jim was grumbling to me about this one day at the Seal Rock House.

" 'I hate the prospect of training,' he said. Training appeals to me just about as strongly as the charity soup appealed to the old apple woman.

" 'Charity soup!' said she. 'Bosh! I'll tell you how they concoct that. They just take a quart of water and boil it down to a pint to make it strong.' "

Catherine de Medici.

Catherine de Medici has been falsely accused of a score of crimes. And those accusations have grown out of one prodigious wickedness for which she was responsible. The massacre of St. Bartholomew, when the Huguenots who had gone up to her daughter's wedding were slaughtered at night in hundreds, some of them by the guards of the king in the very palace where they were sleeping as his guests was intensely disliked by all who knew the truth about it, had not profited by it, or were not blinded by bigotry to the principles of honor. Even the gay chronicler of the Valois court, whose writings show he had little religion and less morality and who thought blood feuds perfectly natural, called it "a very dirty massacre." That single act of fierce hate suddenly let loose by fear and ambition, showed a nature so free from moral restraint as to be capable of anything. And there gathered in the hearts of the friends of the dead a hatred so intense that the most violet words of passionate calumny could not give it vent. Therefore, during the rest of her life, her enemies found pleasure in laying at her door every death that could by any possibility be supposed to profit her, and these wild accusations of hate have become part of the popular idea of Catherine de Medici. The truth is that, aside from the great killing of August, 1572, which she though a stroke of statecraft needed to keep her power, there is no evidence that would warrant a judge in even holding her on a criminal charge. But in her youth, where all the world thought her a clever little woman, patient under the wrongs of a husband she adored, Catherine planned a crime which, had it been known, might have warned the world of the passions that made the massacre of St Bartholomew. The news of this unfinished crime is 350 years old, but it is still fresh, for, considering the strange way I found it out, it seems reasonably certain, gentle reader, that not half a dozen persons have heard of it before you.—Paul Van Dyke in Scribner's Magazine.

POINTERS ON DRAFT HORSES

An expert authority on breeding horses gives the following information on the draft horse, an animal that plays an important part in farm work at this season of the year. He says:

I will undertake to give you a few simple rules to go by in the selection of horse breeding stock. In all my experience of the last thirty years I have acquired a good many rules. I have found from my experience and observation that if you will observe a few simple rules you will not be misled very much in your selection.

You must keep in mind what he is for. He is not to be cut up into steaks and roasts, like the steer. He is an animal of strength. In other words, he is a steam engine on a small scale. His duty is to draw a load and pull heavy weights. And as long as that is true you can see the importance of size. Here weight alone helps to move the load.

A horse that weighs a ton moves a load easier than the 1,800 pound horse. Being in the nature of a machine, to do the best work he must be properly proportioned; he must be balanced. The most important thing in any draft horse is his legs. That is where you get the endurance, and, then, his feet must be good. Look out for his feet and legs. That is where he gets his power.

And you want the legs under the corners, like a table. Build a horse and a table in the same way. You will be surprised if you will take the time to look at the different shapes of horses' legs. The table legs come down to strike the ground, and they are straight, and so you have the essentials to start with. But the horse's legs may turn out at the bottom, or he may be knockkneed, or he may spread at the knees and the feet bend in, or his front legs may set too far apart or too far back.

I might go on to enumerate other positions of the feet and legs that are bad, but there is one thing I have noticed—you take a horse with the legs squarely under the corners and nine times out of ten he has a sloping shoulder and a short back.

Buying one for breeding purposes, I would not buy a long back at any price. While we have a number of laws governing the purchase of horses, I would judge a stallion rather by his good, strong back and his legs. If you have a good level back, plenty of length, with the help of sound joints and good feet, the rest can be done in feeding. I want a clean joint, not a joint that shows, and sound texture of both bones and muscular fiber. I cannot describe the bone I would prefer any better than by comparing it with a razor blade.

Take the razor with the back of the razor forward and you have a good description of the leg construction of the horse. You want what we call a medium bone. And in the selection of young stock—take the horse, for instance—I buy a good many at four years old. They are long, hardy looking and comparatively thin.

They do not look prepossessing at all. I like to buy them at that time. You take one of those colts that is good, with a good set of legs and sufficient bone, and he makes a good horse. He should have heavy, sloping shoulders and good feet. And, though he may have a long head and his joints look big, I care nothing for that, but only for good bones, but the average farmer would say that he is too coarse. I know he will win out, and nine times out of ten he will make a high priced, perfect draft horse.

Succulent Feed For Lambs.

Recent experiments at the Iowa experiment station show that with corn at ordinary prices cheaper gains on lambs may be made with dry feed than with roots or silage. When corn and silage are low in price the gains made with silage are a little cheaper than those made with dry feed. The largest total gains were made by the lambs getting sugar beets, and the finish of this lot was also a little better. The lot getting turnips and cabbage required the largest amount of matter for each 100 pounds gain. Silage and dry feed came next. The least amount of dry matter was required where sugar beets and mangels were fed. The chief objection to mangels and sugar beets is the large amount of hand labor required to raise them.

Sheep on Roughage.

If corn is scarce sheep will beat hogs on pasture, provided they get plenty of corn, but when the hogs get plenty of corn they will range pretty well with sheep. Both animals have their place. Hogs are of no use to work at roughage. A small flock of sheep will do better than a large one.

An Unmanly Act.

The country has witnessed in the last week an act which has no parallel in American history. For political purposes and with the hope of aiding in the election of a Democratic Congress next year, United States Senator Gore has wantonly besmirched the good name of Vice President Sherman. Adroitly, and under cover of the protection afforded in a congressional investigation, Senator Gore throws out the insinuation that Vice President Sherman was a party to an alleged attempt to give a bribe of $25,000 to kill certain opposition to the withdrawal of Indian lands.

With no investigation, no inquiry even on his part to determine the truth or falsity of the statement, Senator Gore testified on the witness stand that another man had mentioned the name of the Vice President as one of the "men higher up" who were "interested" in the alleged bribery scheme to kill the legislation. Too shrewd to make the charge that Vice President Sherman had knowledge of the attempted bribery, Senator Gore spread the poisonous statement and then, as if ashamed of what he had done, qualified it with the comment that he, of course, did not know whether it was true.

Vice President Sherman, horrified at the cold-blooded attempt to blacken his character, promptly made a flat denial of Senator Gore's statement. Every other person mentioned by Senator Gore in his testimony also flatly denied that the name of Vice President Sherman had ever figured, even remotely, in any conversation with Senator Gore in regard to his attitude toward the legislation he says he was asked to favor. The case narrows down to one of veracity between two men, Vice President Sherman and Senator Gore.

Every true American citizen loves fair play. He abhors what is figuratively termed a "blow below the belt." The consensus of opinion of the country, as reflected in the newspapers of all parties, is that Senator Gore's act was so unmanly as to cast discredit on his veracity and nullify any statement he may have made before the investigating committee.

Three months ago Senator Gore publicly made the charge in the United States Senate chamber that he had been offered a bribe of $25,000. It was even before that time, he says, that the name of Vice President Sherman was mentioned in connection with the matter. Not from that day down to the time he took the stand before the investigating committee did Senator Gore so much as intimate to anybody that Vice President Sherman's name had been used by one of the parties alleged to have offered the bribe.

During these three months or more Senator Gore sat in the Senate chamber within fifteen feet of the desk of Vice President Sherman. The manly thing for Senator Gore to have done would have been to inform the Vice President of the use of his name. He, instead, carefully concealed the fact, bided his time and then cloaked with the protection afforded every witness at such an investigation, made public the information. He knew that because of Vice President Sherman's prominence the mere statement, even though not presented as a charge, would be given world-wide publicity. The country was shocked at what Senator Gore had said, but this quickly gave way to a feeling of revulsion toward the man who, without any evidence of any kind to sustain him, would stoop to such depths as to destroy the good name of another man.

With feelings more of pity than anger for Senator Gore, Vice President Sherman, when he learned of the cruel attempt to ruin him, remarked that "if my name was mentioned in connection with the McMurray contracts the many thing for Senater Gore to do would have been to have informed me of the matter." Coming from the one so cruelly wronged, the mild rebuke of Vice President Sherman must have burned into the very soul of Senator Gore. A man less strong and not possessed of the character of the Vice President would have replied to Senator Gore in terms more bitter. Even though wronged Mr. Sherman extends charity to his assailant, respecting to the end the fact that Senator Gore is blind.

American citizens will judge for themselves as between the two men. With their judgment Vice President Sherman need have no fear.

Lock Haven Man Wins.

Lieutenant Charles Donahoe, Company H, Twelfth regiment, Lock Haven, won the Governor's medal in the concluding match of the competitions at the State Rifle Range, at Mt. Gretna, last week, thereby winning the title of the champion shot of the National Guard of Pennsylvania. The achievement was remarkable because it was the first year for Donahoe on the state range. Four competitors contested, the other three being experienced marksmen. Donahoe made a total score of 274 at 200, 600 and 1,000 yards slow fire, and 200 yards rapid fire, also the skirmish run.

The One Weak Spot.

"You ought to have your car equipped with demountable rims," said an automobile man to Richard C. Jenkinson the other day. "All you have to do is to carry an extra rim with inflated tire. In case of a puncture it can be easily attached by a 12-year-old child in two minutes."

"Yes" said Mr. Jenkinson, "but the trouble is always to find the 12-year-old child."—Newark News.

FOUND RUNAWAY GIRL

Jersey Shore Girl Was Attracted by Man Traveling With Circus.

Fourteen-year-old Grace Hammerstine, of Jersey Shore, a daughter of Mrs. Charles Yeager, spent a day or two last week as a member of the Robbins circus. Almost before she had time to become accustomed to circus life she was picked up by the police at Tyrone and shipped back to her home, where her mother was waiting to spank her. On Saturday a man, working with the circus as a wagon driver, was taken to Jersey Shore, to answer the charge of enticing the girl from her home.

The circus exhibited at Jersey Shore two days before coming to Bellefonte. When the elephant and camels and clowns marched out of town, headed for Lock Haven, Miss Hammerstine went with them. Whether willingly or not is a point on which there is some difference of opinion. After being picked up by the police she alleged that she had been coaxed away from home. According to some of the showmen she joined the circus at her own suggestion and because of her sudden infatuation for one of the wagon men.

On Thursday Mrs. Yeager came to Bellefonte and asked Chief of Police Dukeman to find her daughter. It was evening before Dukeman had a description of the girl. He searched the several tents and also the circus train, but could find no trace of the girl. On the following day, however, the girl was found and returned to her mother.

While Chief Dukeman was hunting for the Jersey Shore girl he came across another girl, also in her teens, sitting in one of the circus tents. Upon being questioned she said that she was from Emporium and that she had come to Bellefonte to see the circus. Knowing that this was not true Chief Dukeman started her back to town from the showgrounds and said that unless she started for her home on the evening train he would lock her up. When the evening train for Lock Haven arrived the young girl boarded it, explaining that she had seen enough of show life to satisfy her for some time to come and that she was only too glad to return home.

KILLING A WEASEL

Big News Event; Written by Our Man on the Spot.

On Sunday, about 11.30, when most of Bellefonte's census were overlooking the collection plate or hoping their neighbors would note how well they sang, the rest were engaged in trying to exterminate a weasel which was possessed of a remarkable record for chicken murder. It seems that James Furst and Paul Sheffer were walking along Allegheny Street when they noticed some sparrows fluttering about a Weasel, near Parrish's drug store. Their hunting instinct being aroused, they determined to kill the Weasel or know the reason why. Each securing several stones, they managed to get the Weasel between them and started to close in. Just as the execution was about to be consummated the Weasel slipped between Sheffer's extremities and scutttled under the wooden crossing of the alley at Parrish's drug store.

By this time quite a crowd had collected to help with the chase. Harry Otto, who had been rudely awakened by the commotion, appeared at one of the windows of his flat clad in what appeared to be a mixture of nature and a kimona, and took charge by placing Milan Walker and Billy McFarlane at one end of the crossing in order to drive the Weasel out the other end, where it was Furst's duty to give it a warm reception with a large club, re-inforced by Herbert Auman with a broom and Ed. Gates who had a waste paper basket with which he expected to cage the Weasel.

McFarlane and Walker opened the battle by firing stones and sticks under the crossing, and Furst being told the Weasel was coming out his end, raised his club ready for a mighty blow. The Weasel cautiously sticking his head out, Furst struck, missing it by a foot and Frank Smith's nose by an inch. The Weasel withdrew its nose and Smith also moved out of the danger zone. Not being able to induce the Weasel to come out a long pole was secured and thrust into the hole. The Weasel was forced to come further out and Furst's blow this time would have been good for a home run if he had'nt missed.

The Weasel, now thoroughly frightened, doubled back and jumped out of the other end of the crossing, narrowly escaping from jumping into Walker's mouth and darting up the alley with the crowd in pursuit. Having drawn its pursuers after it, the Weasel then slipped back and vanished into a hole in the stone building, where Auman stood with his broom raised too excited to strike. The crowd, too disgusted to discuss the matter, departed for their respective homes, no doubt to take care of chickens that were now entirely safe from Weasels.

Falls Down Stairs.

Owing to a sudden attack of dizziness, Mrs. Theresa Tate, of Bishop street, fell down a flight of twenty-two steps in the rear of her home, on Thursday evening, last, and was severely bruised and cut. As Mr. Tate is 82 years old, it is more than remarkable that no bones were broken. Her head was badly gashed, while she sustained many bruises about the body. We are glad to state that at present she is much better and her friends have every hope of a speedy recovery.

Company E Reunion.

General Sherman marched from Ohio and raised the siege. Meanwhile, however, many of the boys succumbed to starvation and the ravages of war, so that the percentage was about five in loss, wounded and killed in battle.

At Cold Harbor the entire company but one man, Ira Buck, who hid in a clump of bushes, was either killed, wounded or captured. While at Campbell Station, Kentucky, the company reenlisted and recruited another 100 men, so that the Company E. roll calls for 201 men of which number but a small percentage are living.

Company E. was composed of many well known families of Ferguson and Half-moon townships and the adjoining township of Franklin, in Huntingdon county. Huntingdon county was represented by Company C., recruited nearby and which was closely associated with Company E, as neighbors and also as soldier boys.

So that there is scarcely a family in Ferguson, Half-Moon and Franklin townships but what is associated in one way or another with Company E. Among them were the Baileys, represented by six members; the Kriders, five; the Campbells, three; Bells, three; Irvins, three; Millers, five; Riders, three; Frys, two; Murphys, three; Kauffmans, three, also the Goheens, and so on down the line. Hardly a family but what gave to the service a father or a son—all brave and gallant soldiers, men who saw active service and truly were the "men behind the guns."

The families in the valley that were represented included the Mussers, Heberlings, McWilliams, Bucks, Ellenbergers, Ewings, Eyers, Cronisters, Davis', Glenns, Goldmans, Meyers, Mayes, Ways, Thompsons, Wards and many others whose names cannot be recalled on the spur of the moment.

It is to the representatives of these splendid families that the appeal now is made for funds to erect a suitable monument. With so few of the survivors left no doubt the citizens will only too gladly bear the burden of the expense and thus make possible the formal dedication of the monument on the fiftieth anniversary of the departure of Company E. for the seat of war.

The following is a brief outline of the march by land and sea of this gallant old company: The journey to the national capital, Fort Monroe, joined Sherman's fleet for the South, South Carolina, Georgia, back to Virginia, Second Bull Run, South Mountain and Antietam, Fredericksburg, Kentucky, East Tennessee, Vicksburg and return, to engage with Grant's campaign of the Wilderness, Petersburg and fall of Richmond, to Appomatox, covering 13,000 miles. Many times on the march the boys were footsore and weary, and at times lousey and starving. Not unlike the Queen of Sheba, the half has never been told, nor will it ever be told. Not an officer is living and but a corporal's guard of the men who were behind the guns. But the Company E. organization will continue to exist until the last roll call up yonder before the Great Commander of all armies and all nations, of which ours is the greatest. Meanwhile the bones of those lost in battle or on the march or in Confederate prisons lie in a dozen or more States.

Such a record should inspire every patriotic citizen to aid in the worthy movement to erect a fine monument and one that will preserve the name of every member of the old company. "The Republican" is confident that there is sufficient patriotism in the hearts of Centre countians to insure the success of the project.

A BANK ACCOUNT.

A man came to us recently and asked us to lend him five hundred dollars with which to buy a pair of horses. He told us that with an additional team he could make a thousand dollars more, on a lumber contract he had.

He got the money, because we wanted to help him, and because we have found him reliable in the past. This is an illustration of the value of a bank account in a bank that always has money to lend its patrons.

Howard.

A more indignant lot of people could not be found than we had here last Wednesday afternoon while the passenger train was at the station. After the passenge train had pulled into the station it was necessary for a freight to pull out of the way. When the engineer of the freight turned the steam into the cylinders it threw out a lot of grease and water which had condensed while the train was standing. This was thrown into the air and descended upon the people who were passing to and from the train as well as those who were standing by. Several finely dressed ladies had their clothes totally ruined by the grease.

At a meeting of the school board Saturday afternoon W. H. Neff & Son were awarded the contract for painting the exterior of the school building and Charles Confer the interior, their bids being $137.50 and $69 respectively. The contract for papering the rooms and halls was held over. W. E. Confer was awarded the contract for cleaning the building. Chicken thieves continue their night raids on the coops of our friends and neighbors, and the practice is being carried on beyond the point of tolerance. The parties whe have been carrying this on have been extravagant in their practice as the conditions which exist at the old Shope shanty in Butler's grove will indicate. Whole chickens have been thrown away there and usually in dressing the chickens they do not take the trouble to pick the wings but discard the whole member of the fowl. A great many fruit trees have also been robbed of their fruit during the past two weeks.

"BACK TO THE FARM"

V.—Social Life In the Country.

By C. V. GREGORY.

(Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.)

THE social life and amusements of the country are essentially different from those in the city. I have heard people say that there is no such thing as social life in the country, but inquiry disclosed the fact that they never had spent much time in a modern, wide-awake farm community. The foundation of all social life is in the home. It is in the country that the home is developed to the highest extent, and it necessarily follows that it is in the country that the strongest basis for a healthy social life exists.

The social life of the so called "society" people of the city does not exist in the country, and it is a blessing to the country that it does not. Such a social life is unnatural. Social life is primarily for amusement, recreation and development. Where is the amusement or the recreation in the struggle for social recognition by a clique whom a turn of the wheel of fortune has brought uppermost? Where is the development unless it be the development of heartaches on the part of the wife and poverty on the part of the husband? Such a society, where people are measured by their money rather than by their true worth, is snobbery rather than social life.

Outside the "society" circles the social life of the city consists largely of amusements—Coney Island and its imitators, theaters and public dances. Some of these things are all right in their way. They furnish amusement and recreation. But they do not furnish development.

Here is where the great advantage of country social life comes in. It is not furnished ready made to those who have the price. Social diversions in the country are made to order. That is the reason why some people do not like them, and that is why a person who once really gets into the spirit of country social life is never afterward satisfied with social affairs in which he cannot have an active part.

The social possibilities of the country are not taken advantage of in all communities, it is true. In too many places each family is content to live by itself, with as little intercourse as possible with the neighbors. It is such communities that contribute most largely to the townward flow of population. With the general waking up of the farming districts is coming a broadening of social life. In some places the local church is the social center, but too often there are some members who consider so harmless a thing as an ice cream supper to help pay the preacher a sin. As a result the importance of the church as a social factor is not what it should be.

FARMERS' PICNIC DINNER ON THE GRASS.

The most important centers of social life in the country are farmers' organizations of various kinds. Probably the most important of these, because the most extensive, is the grange. The grange has been in existence for forty-four years and numbers at present more than 1,000,000 members. In those communities where it has obtained a strong hold it is very effective in bringing the people together. In the older states a grange neighborhood can be told by the looks of the farms and buildings.

The plan of the local grange is to hold meetings at regular intervals, usually once a week in the winter and sometimes as infrequently as once a month in the summer. Generally these meetings are held at the home of one of the members. The whole family belongs. As a rule, there is a literary program in connection with the meeting, where the boys and girls learn to talk in public. Part of the program is devoted to agricultural topics, as one of the objects of the grange is education in farming. There is always enough amusement mixed in, however, to keep the children interested. In the winter the meetings begin in the afternoon, and the men look over the stock and talk over their problems while the children play and the women "visit."

In addition to the grange, there are many local farmers' clubs that are doing a great deal to bring their members together socially. The only reason that there are not more such organizations is the lack of some one to take the lead. The cities have so long been drawing the best blood from some rural communities that in many places there is precious little left to build upon. With the changing conditions that are restoring the farm to a leading place in our national life there will be no lack of leaders, and the time will come when every community will have its club or grange.

In the Mississippi valley states, where industrial co-operation has obtained a strong foothold, co-operative picnics are one of the principal diversions. These are big affairs, including all the people for miles around. There are speeches and amusements and plenty to eat, and every one goes home happy.

A number of country towns and rural communities have a "field day" once or twice a year, which is in the nature of a big picnic, at which athletic contests predominate.

Local Fourth of July celebrations give the country boys a chance to work off their patriotism for a week in advance in helping to get things ready, and they enjoy the day a great deal more than they would a ready made celebration in a big town, where all they could do would be to stand on the side lines and shout. The best part of these affairs is that they develop originality and initiative on the part of the young people. It teaches them to develop any latent ability for leadership which they may possess. The boy who can get together nine farmer boys on Saturday afternoons and organize them into a ball team that can win from the neighboring township is the one who is going to be able to do things when he gets older. It is no small task to make an effective team out of nine boys when eight of them want to pitch and the other couldn't catch a ball to save his life.

It is the farm boys of today who will be foremost in the agricultural communities of tomorrow. One of the most important of the social factors affecting farm life is a boys' club. Nebraska has a well developed system of boys' and girls' corn clubs. There are a few in Iowa and Illinois, and more are being organized. The members of these clubs each have their plot of corn. They meet around from place to place, get better acquainted with one another and study corn growing. Often an experienced corn grower meets with them and gives them some practical lessons. In some cases these clubs are under the supervision of the agricultural college, which sends out letters of instruction to the boys every two weeks or so. In the winter a corn contest is held at the agricultural college. Some of the counties have local contests. There are prizes for the best corn and for the best corn judging. Often the boys who do the best work at the local contests have their expenses paid to the state contest at the agricultural college. Similar contests in cooking and sewing are held for the girls. Work of this kind is an inspiration to the boys and girls. They begin to see some of the real enjoyment of farm life.

This work is being extended to the boys of the cities by means of summer camps, where the boys are taken for a vacation, at the same time getting instruction and object lessons in agriculture. Many a boy who otherwise would have spent his life in town working for somebody else is thus started on the way to become an independent farmer.

Another big factor in rural social life is the country literary society. This reaches more people than a grange or a club can reach. Its disadvantage is that the membership is so large that only a few can appear on the programs. But a great many can listen, and they eagerly avail themselves of the opportunity. The country literary society when rightly managed combines both the social and the educational features and is a great uplift to the community.

Along with these other social factors come the local lecture courses. The talent is not always the best, but usually it is surprisingly good. Then there are ice cream suppers, picnics and fishing excursions in the summer and oyster suppers in the winter. The women often have a ladies' aid society, where they can meet and sew and visit to their hearts' content. The men have a fraternal order or two, where they can get together on Saturday evening. During the last few years the Y. M. C. A. has been extending to the country and doing a great deal of good work. Often clubrooms and a gymnasium are established, where the neighborhood boys can meet and try their athletic skill. Where such rooms have taken the place of the grocery store as an evening meeting place for the boys and young men there is a noticeable improvement in the community.

During vacations, when the young people are home from school, there is no lack of social diversions that appeal especially to them. There is just as much culture among these modern young people of the country as there is among the same classes in the city and much more whole heartedness. The country dances and parties are well conducted affairs and the occasion of much harmless fun. An occasional trip to town to attend the theater by way of the trolley line or in automobiles or in a big sleigh gives variety to the amusements.

Taking all these factors together, the social life found in the most highly developed country communities is superior in almost every way to that found in the cities. The development of this wholesome social life and its more general extension throughout the country will be important factors in turning the tide of population countryward.

TWAIN'S FIRST LECTURE.

Bret Harte Headed the Claque, but the Audience Swamped Them.

Mr. Clemens prepared a lecture for his San Francisco audience, giving a most extravagant account of what he had seen among the south sea islands. When Bret Harte and some other of his friends were told of his platform intention they agreed to go in a body to the old Mechanics' hall, where Twain was to deliver himself, and form a big claque that would insure the success of the affair.

Mark wrote his own handbills, which set the town agog with anticipation. One particularly inviting phrase printed at the bottom of the announcement was, "The trouble will begin at 8 p. m."

The hall was crowded, and the claque was uproarious when Clemens appeared upon the platform. The lecture was delivered with manifest effort in a slow, deliberate, drawling manner, and the lecturer paid no heed whatever to the inconsiderate demands of "Faster, faster! We can't stay here all night!" and other urgent calls.

Although Harte tried to steer the claquers, they insisted upon applauding and laughing in the wrong places, which may or may not have been intended as a joke on Twain, but at last the audience, which began to catch on to the unique style of the man and to appreciate his quaintly whimsical utterances, overwhelmed the claque and had things its own way.

An old timer who attended the lecture says of the effect of Twain upon his first audience: "His slow drawl, the anxious and perturbed expression of his visage, the apparently painful effort with which he framed his sentences and, above all, the surprise that spread over his face when the audience roared with delight or rapturously applauded the finer passages were unlike anything of the kind they had ever known. The lecture was a great success."—Bailey Millard in Hampton's Magazine.

GATHERING PRUNES.

The Fruit Is Never Picked, but Is Allowed to Fall to the Ground.

A peculiarity of prunes is that they are never picked from the trees, but are allowed to fall to the ground. The reason is that a prune must be dead ripe, with all its sugar developed, or it will not cure properly. Therefore the ground under the trees is carefully prepared and leveled to make a soft, smooth bed for the falling fruit. Gathering the fallen prunes is a staple industry in August and September. Boys and girls and often entire families are employed in it, camping in the orchards.

Being gathered, the prunes are rolled down troughs full of tiny needles that prick their skins. They are then dipped in a hot solution containing lye, which cleanses them, and rinsed in cold water. Next they are put in broad, shallow wooden trays and laid in the sun for two or three weeks. This sun drying practically converts them into the staple prunes of commerce and of boarding house jokes. At the packing house they are assorted as to size by a machine which shakes them over a huge sieve. The farther the prune travels over the sieve the larger the holes, and when it comes to a hole a little bigger than itself it drops through into the proper bin. It is then run through a vat containing hot water and finally rolls down a chute into a wooden packing box—the same box that you see at the grocer's. When the prunes pour from the chute, however, there is a removable frame about three inches high on top of the box. Box and frame go under a press, which promptly stamps down the contents so that they are no higher than the top of the box. The frame is lifted off, the cover is nailed on the box, and the prunes are ready to ship.—Will Payne in Saturday Evening Post.

More Serious.

"Mathilde Browne was very rude to an overdressed old woman she met on the street car the other day."

"I know the story. The old woman turned out to be Mathilde's very rich aunt, and now she's going to give all her money to a hospital for decrepit dogs."

"Nothing of the sort. In fact, it's worse. The old woman was the Browns' new cook, and now they haven't any."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Mecca of the Buddhists.

Tibet lies between the latitude of Rome and Cairo, yet, owing to the fact that it is nearly all one series of lofty tablelands, its climate is purely arctic. There is hardly any rain, and biting dry winds send dust or dry snowstorms forever raging across its inhospitable uplands.

Lassa, its capital, is the Mecca of the Buddhist world, and pious Buddhists gain much merit by making the pilgrimage.

Expurgating It.

"Elfleda, what did your father say when he heard that I had been here calling on you?"

"He said you were a numskull, a mollycoddle and a jolterhead."

"Is that all?"

"That's all. Guy—except the adjectives."—Chicago Tribune.

He Countered.

"The position is yours, sir, if you will deposit $1,000 as security."

"I accept your offer, sir, if you will deposit $1,000 as a security for my security."—Exchange.

To Live Long.

If you wish to be a Methuselah you will have to quit doing all the things that make it worth while not to be one.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

That section six of article five be amended, by striking out the said section, and inserting in place thereof the following:

In Philadelphia all suits shall be instituted in the said courts of common pleas without designating the number of the said court, and the several courts shall distribute and apportion the business among them in such manner as shall be provided by rules of court, and each court, to which any suit shall be thus assigned, shall have exclusive jurisdiction thereof, subject to change of venue, as shall be provided by law.

In the county of Allegheny all the jurisdiction and powers now vested in the several numbered courts of common pleas shall be vested in one court of common pleas, composed of all the judges in commission in said courts. Such jurisdiction and powers shall extend to all proceedings at law and in equity which shall have been instituted in the several numbered courts, and shall be subject to such changes as may be made by law, and subject to change of venue as provided by law. The president judge of said court shall be selected as provided by law. The number of judges in said court may be by law increased from time to time. This amendment shall take effect on the first day of January succeeding its adoption.

"Section 8. The debt of any county, city, borough, township, school district, or other municipality or incorporated district, except as herein provided, shall never exceed seven per centum upon the assessed value of the taxable property therein, nor shall any such municipality or district incur any new debt, or increase its indebtedness to an amount exceeding two per centum upon such assessed valuation of property, without the assent of the electors thereof at a public election in such manner as shall be provided by law; but any city, the debt of which now exceeds seven per centum of such assessed valuation, may be authorized by law to increase the same three per centum, in the aggregate, at any one time, upon such valuation," so as to read as follows:—

Section 8. The debt of any county, city, borough, township, school district, or other municipality or incorporated district, except as herein provided, shall never exceed seven per centum upon the assessed value of the taxable property therein, nor shall any such municipality or district incur any new debt, or increase its indebtedness to an amount exceeding two per centum upon such assessed valuation of property, without the assent of the electors thereof at a public election in such manner as shall be provided by law; but any city, the debt of which now exceeds seven per centum of such assessed valuation, may be authorized by law to increase the same three per centum, in the aggregate, at any one time, upon such valuation, except that any debt or debts hereinafter incurred by the city and county of Philadelphia for the construction and development of subways for transit purposes, or for the construction of wharves and docks, or the reclamation of land to be used in the construction of a system of wharves and docks, as public improvements, owned or to be owned by said city and county of Philadelphia, and which shall yield to the city and county of Philadelphia current net revenue in excess of the interest on said debt or debts and of the annual installments necessary for the cancellation of said debt or debts, may be excluded in ascertaining the power of the city and county of Philadelphia to become otherwise indebted: Provided, That a sinking fund for their cancellation shall be established and maintained.

Peach Pointers.

A little lemon juice brings out the flavor of all preparations of peaches.

Peaches cooked in a bit of water, sweetened, placed in a previously baked pie crust and covered with whipped cream, make a dainty dessert.

Peaches for canning should be fresh, firm and of good quality.

To sterilize the jars before canning, wash and fill with cold water. Set them in a kettle on a pan and fill kettle with cold water. Set on stove and bring slowly to boiling point. Remove and drain. Fill while hot.

Covers should rest in hot water for five minutes, then drained and used while hot.

The economical housewife uses new rubbers each season. A can of fruit spoiled by using old rubbers would have paid for a package of new ones.

Use a silver knife to peel peaches, as a steel knife may discolor the fruit.

Use best granulated sugar and porcelain lined or agate vessels.

Always introduce a silver spoon between fruit and jar before sealing, in order that the air bubbles may rise to the top and break.

Not Such a Paradise.

Californians are everywhere known as boosters. It is said that a citizen of Los Angeles knocked at the pearly gate and replied to the questions asked. But when he stated his residence St. Peter shook his head dubiously.

"The gate's open if you want to come, but I don't think you'll care much for the place," he said.—The Housekeeper.

Grumbach went into his wallet still again. This document the chancellor read with an interest foreign to the affair under his hand. Presently he laughed softly.

"I am sorry, Herr Grumbach. All this unnecessary trouble simply because of the word Bavaria. How long will you be making your visit?"

"Only a few days. Then I shall proceed to Bavaria."

"Your excellency has no further orders?" said the head gardener patiently.

"Good heaven, Breunner, I had forgotten all about you! There is nothing more. Herr Captain, you will return with me to the ballroom?"

"If your excellency will excuse me, no. I am tired. I shall return to the hotel with Herr Grumbach."

Carmichael and Grumbach crossed the Platz leisurely.

"How did you come by that Bavarian passport?" asked Carmichael abruptly.

"It is a forgery, my friend, but his excellency will never find that out."

"You have me all at sea. Why did he bring in the head gardener and leave him standing there all that while?"

"He had a sound purpose, but it fell. The head gardener did not recognize me."

"Do you know him?"

"Yes. He is my elder brother."

The ambassador from Jugendheit, Baron von Steinbock, was not popular in Dreiberg, at least not among the people who still held to the grand duke's idea that the kingdom had been behind the abduction of the Princess Hildegarde. Never a hot headed Dreiberger passed his house without a desire to loot it, to scale the piked fence and batter in the doors and windows.

The king of Jugendheit was to marry her serene highness. The menials in and about the embassy felt the new importance of their positions. So then imagine the indignation of the majordomo when, summoned at dusk one evening to the carriage gates three or four days after the portentous news had issued from the palace, he found only a ragged and grimy carter who demanded peremptorily to be admitted and taken to his excellency at once.

"Go away!" The majordomo spun on his heels contemptuously.

"I will skin you alive," vowed the carter, striking the iron with the butt of his whip, "if you do not open these gates immediately. Open!"

"If you do not stop hammering on those bars I shall send for the police."

The carter thrust a hand through the grill. There was a ring on one of his fingers.

"Imbecile, set your eye on that and admit me without more ado!"

The majordomo was thunderstruck.

He threw back the bolts, and the carter pushed his way in. That ring on the carter's finger!

"Take me to the baron."

Vastly subdued, the majordomo preceded the carter into the office of the embassy and went in search of the baron, who was in his study.

"Your excellency, there is a man in the office who desires to see you quickly. A carter!"

The ambassador jumped to his feet.

"One moment, your excellency. He wore a ring on his finger, and I could not refuse him." The majordomo whispered two words. The ambassador rushed from the study. It was dark in the embassy office. Quickly the ambassador lighted some candles. Gas would be too bright for such a meeting.

"WHO ARE YOU?"

"Well, your excellency?" said a voice from the leather lounge.

"Who are you?" For this was not the voice the baron expected to hear.

"My name at present does not matter. The news I bring is far more important. His majesty emphatically declines any alliance with the house of Ehrenstein."

"Damnation!" swore the ambassador.

"The exact word used by the prince. Now then, what's to be done?"

"This means war."

"War! It looks as if you and I, baron, shall not accompany the king of Prussia into Alsace-Lorraine."

"This is horrible!"

"But what possessed the prince to blunder like this?"

"The prince really is not to blame. Our king, baron, is a young colt. A few months ago he gave his royal uncle carte blanche to seek a wife for him. Politics demanded an alliance between Jugendheit and Ehrenstein. There have been too many years of useless antagonism. On the head of this bolt from heaven comes the declaration of his majesty that he will marry any other princess on the continent."

"They will pull this place down."

"Let them. We have 10,000 more troops than Ehrenstein."

"You young men are a pack of fools!"

"Softly, baron."

"Where is the king?"

The carter smiled. "He is hunting, they say, with the crown prince of Bavaria."

"But you, why have you come dressed like this?"

"That is a little secret."

"But what's to be done?"

"Tell lies. They will suspend the catastrophe till we are ready to meet it. The marriage is not to take place till spring. That will give us plenty of time. After the coronation his majesty may be brought to reason. This marriage must not fall through now. The grand duke will not care to become the laughingstock of Europe. The prince's advice is for you to go about your affairs as usual. Only one man must be taken into your confidence, and that man is Herbeck. If any one can straighten out his end of the tangle it is he."

"Where is the prince?"

"Wherever he is he is working for the best interests of the state."

"There is the Bavarian princess," remarked the ambassador musingly.

"Ha! A good thought! But the king is romantic. She is older than he and ugly."

"You are not telling me everything," intuitively.

"I know it. I am telling you all that is at present necessary."

"You make me the unhappiest man in the kingdom! I have worked so hard and long toward this end. When did the king decline this alliance?"

"Evidently the moment he heard it. I have his letter. Listen:

"My illustrious and industrious Uncle—I regret exceedingly that at this late day I should cause you political embarrassment, but when I gave my consent to the espousal of any of the various princesses at liberty surely it was understood that Ehrenstein was not to be considered. I refuse to marry the daughter of the man who privately strove to cover my father with contumely, who dared impute to him a crime that was any man's but my father's. I realise that certain policies called for this stroke on your part, but it cannot be. My dear uncle, you have dug a fine pit, and I hope you will find a safe way out of it. I refuse to marry the Princess Hildegarde. This is final. It can be arranged without any discredit to the duke or to yourself. Let it be said that her serene highness has thrown me over. I shan't go to war about it.

"FREDERICK.

"Observe 'My illustrious and industrious uncle!'" laughed the carter without mirth. "Our king, you will see, has a graceful style." He gained his feet. He was young, pleasant of face, but a thorough soldier.

"You are Lieutenant von Radenstein!" cried the ambassador. "I recognize you now."

"Thanks, your excellency!"

"You are in the royal household, the regent's invisible arm. I have heard a good deal about you. I knew your father well."

"Again, thanks. Now, the regent has heard certain rumors regarding an American named Carmichael, a consul. He is often seen with her highness. Rather an extraordinary privilege."

"Rest your mind there, lieutenant. This Carmichael is harmless. He can be eliminated at any time."

"This is reassuring. You will see the chancellor tonight and show him this letter?"

"I will."

"One word more, and then I'm off. If a butcher or a baker or even a mountaineer pulls the bell cord and shows this ring admit him without fail. He will have vital news."

For half an hour the ambassador remained staring at the candlesticks. He wanted no dinner. He rang for his hat and coat, and twenty minutes later he was in the chancellor's cabinet.

"You seem out of health, baron," was the chancellor's greeting.

"I am indeed that, count. I received a letter today from the prince regent. It was sent to him by his majesty, who is hunting in Bavaria. Read it, count, but I pray to you to do nothing hastily."

The chancellor did not open the letter; he merely balanced it. His accustomed pallor assumed a grayish tinge.

"So his majesty declines?" he said evenly.

"You have already heard?" cried the amazed ambassador.

"Nothing. I surmise. The hour, your appearance, the letter—to what else could they point? I was afraid all along. Ah, if his majesty could but see her! Is she not worthy of a crown?"

"Herbeck, nothing would please me better than to see this marriage consummated."

"I believe you. We two peoples should be friendly. It has taken me months to bring this matter round. The duke rebelled; her highness scorned the hand of Frederick. Still, if you saw all the evidence in the case you would not blame the duke for his attitude."

"But those documents are rank forgeries!"

"So they may be, but that has not been proved. What remedy do you suggest?" asked the chancellor.

"I suggest that the duke must not know."

"Agreed. Go on."

"You will put the matter before her highness."

"That will be difficult."

"Let her repudiate the negotiations. Let her say that she has changed her mind. His majesty is quite willing that the humiliation be his."

"That is generous. But suppose she has set her heart on the crown of Jugendheit. What then?"

"In that event the affair is no longer in our hands, but in God's."

"Is there no way of changing the king's mind?"

"Read the letter, count," said the ambassador.

Herbeck read the letter. It was the work of a rather irresponsible boy.

"May I take this to her highness?" asked the chancellor. "I promise its contents will not go beyond her eye."

"I will take the risk."

Herbeck consulted his watch. It was half after 6. Her highness did not dine till 8.

"I shall go to her highness immediately, baron. I shall return the letter by messenger, and he will tell you the result of the interview."

"God be with you," said the ambassador, preparing to take his leave, "for all women are contrary."

After the baron was gone the chancellor paced the room with halting step. Then toward the wraith of his ambition he waved a hand as if to explain how futile are the schemes of men. He proceeded to the apartments of her highness. Would she toss aside this crown or would she fight for it? He found her alone.

He saluted her hand respectfully. "I have here a letter. I have given my word that its contents shall not be repeated to the duke, your father. If I let you read it will you agree to that?"

"And who has written this letter?" noncommittally.

"His majesty the king of Jugendheit," slowly.

"A letter from the king!" she cried, curious. "Should it not be brought to me on a golden salver?"

"It is probable that I am bringing it to you at the end—of a bayonet," solemnly. "If the duke learns it contents the inevitable result will be war."

A silence fell upon them.

"He declines the honor of my hand—is that not it?" she finally said.

The chancellor assented.

"Ah!" with a note of pride in her voice and a flash in her eyes. "And I?"

"You will tell the duke that you have changed your mind," gravely.

"And if I refuse to change my mind?"

"I am resigned to any and all events."

"War!" Her face was serious. "And what has the king to suggest?"

"He proposes to accept the humiliation of being rejected by you."

"Why, this is a gallant king! Pouf! There goes a crown of thistledown." Then she laughed. There was nothing but youth in the laughter—youth and gladness. "Listen to me. I declare to you that I am happier at this moment than I have been in days. To marry a man I have never seen, whose looks, character and habits are unknown—why, I have lived in a kind of horror. I am free!" And she uttered the words as with the breath of spring.

The chancellor's shoulders drooped a trifle more, and his hand closed down over the letter.

"There will be no war," resumed her highness. "I know my father. Our wills may clash, but in this instance mine shall be the stronger."

"But this is not the end."

"You mean that there will be other kings?"

FOLEY'S ORINO LAXATIVE
FOR STOMACH TROUBLE AND CONSTIPATION

Points For Mothers

There are some problems in raising an only child. How to restrain from selfishness is one of these. Another is how to create the independence which is usually the portion of members of a large family.

Here is the story of one woman who seems to be bringing her one little girl up in exactly the right way.

"No, Mary," she said recently, "you cannot go to visit Jane today at all. You were there yesterday. I do not wish you to feel that you must always either go somewhere or have some one at the house. I want you to be independent of others. Learn to draw upon yourself for amusement."

Mary seemed quite satisfied and proceeded to entertain herself.

"I never have allowed the child to acquire the habit of feeling that she must always have some one with her," said her mother. "If I see a tendency in that direction I have her remain at home alone for a day or two until her equilibrium is again established. I think there would be fewer gadding, gossiping women if mothers took pains to adopt this plan with their children."

This seemed rather a sensible view, and I led her on to still further express herself. "Why," she said, "I know women who feel that they cannot stand it to be alone for even an hour. They seem really miserable if left to their own resources. They seem to have no resources within themselves, but are always expecting some one to entertain them or amuse them. I think it leads to all sorts of evils," she added emphatically.

"Now, had they been taught in childhood to find something to do with every hour and to really look forward to the opportunity of solitude for the accomplishment of many things, such as study, reading or work, all this restlessness would have been avoided. The habit of self reliance is the best kind of help in all sorts of emergencies. I mean that my girl shall first of all be self reliant."

Good Use For Picture Postals.

Mrs. Frank O. Lowden, wife of a member of congress from Illinois, who before her marriage was Florence Pullman of the parlor car family, has discovered a way to turn to admirable use the picture postcard idea. Her five little daughters receive scores of cards from friends and relatives traveling abroad, and now, instead of tossing them away or lumbering up their nursery with them, they place them in orderly fashion in a scrap book. If each card is written a history of the city or country from which it came, and each child must study this out for herself. She must arrange her cards by countries. Mrs. Lowden thinks this provides valuable mental training for her children and impresses geographical facts in their minds. When the books have served their purpose in the nursery and the children have become so familiar with all the books contain that they are no longer interested the volumes are sent to hospitals or to homes for crippled children, where they are most welcome. This pretty and charitable custom is gradually taking root among the wealthy children of the capital.

In the Nursery.

If the nursery window is not protected by outside bars, hammer a large screw or nail into the groove of the lower sash so that the window cannot be raised more than six inches.

If the top sash is drawn down, this is quite enough for ventilation, and, no matter how ingenious or venturesome the little ones may be, they cannot wriggle through the small lower opening.

Provide each little one in the nursery with its own towel, sponge, hairbrush and toothbrush and teach the children that it is not right to use each other's things.

Hairbrushes should be kept perfectly clean and frequently washed in soda water.

Sponges, too, should be treated in the same way, and when they are greasy and slimy they should be cleaned by placing them in boiling water in which soda—two ounces to each quart of water—has been dissolved and left for twenty-four hours to soak. Afterward rinse in vinegar and water.

The Children's Guide.

A novel way of earning a living has been discovered by an old man who lives in London. Just close to his home there is a point where five busy roads meet, and crossing through all the traffic is something of an ordeal. But numbers of school children have to do it, much to the anxiety of their mothers.

So "Old Joe," as he is called, though his name is William Willcrox, hit upon the idea of taking the children across. And now he is to be seen every day picking his way carefully past tramway cars and through the crowded traffic with a small child clinging to each arm, while on the pavement behind a small crowd of other children are awaiting their turn.

He reckons to take about 300 school children across the road in this way every day and lives entirely on the tips given him by grateful parents.

A HARD STRUGLE

Many a Bellefonte Citizen Finds the Struggle Hard.

With a back constantly aching,
With distressing urinary disorders,
Daily existence is but a struggle,
No need to keep it up,
Doan's Kidney Pills will cure you.
Bellefonte endorse this claim:

Mrs. C. Johnson, 365 East Bishop St., Bellefonte, Pa., Bellefonte, Pa., says: "I cannot say too much in praise of Doan's Kidney Pills, for they are the best remedy I ever used for backache and other symptoms of kidney complaint. At one time my back was so lame and painful that I could hardly get around and dizzy spells were common. I was restless at night and my kidneys gave me great annoyance, the secretions being too frequent in passage. On the advice of a member of my family who had used Doan's Kidney Pills with benefit, I procured a supply at Green's Pharmacy Co. and they did me more good than any other medicine I had previously taken. The passages of the kidney secretions were regulated and the pain and lameness in my back was removed. I heartily reccommend Doan's Kidney Pills to anyone afflicted with kidney complaint." (Statement given Oct. 21, 1907.)

Parmanent Relief. On Nov. 23, 1009, Mrs. Johnson was interviewed and she said; "I still have unlimited confidence in Doan's Kidney Pills. They permanently cured me of Kidney trouble and I have had no need of a kidney medicine during the past two years. Other members of my family have taken Doan's Kidney Pills and in each case benefit has been received."

The Most Widely Circulated Book.

It has been urged that a Chinese almanac which is printed at Pekin is the most widely circulated book in the world. Its annual edition consists of 8,000,000 copies, which are sent all over China, and none of these ever come back to the printer. There is, of course, one book which distances this record, as the London Book Monthly points out, for the Bible now exists in more than 500 languages and dialects and it is estimated that its sale is something like 12,000,000 copies a year.

The Crops

Crops reports to Bradstreet's are more uniformly favorable than at any previous date this year. Weather conditions have been propitious in practically every section, and some of the bad effects of earlier unfavorable weather have been repaired, though most of the later sown crops are behind a year ago.

Corn has been benefited in the southwest by timely rains, and some lost ground has been regained. The crop is still a very spotted one, however, and the general feeling is that the increased acreage will about offset the lower than a year ago condition. The south will apparently have a record crop of corn, but a late arrival of killing frost is necessary for a crop in excess of last year to be gathered in the northern half of the belt. A late, warm autumn similar to last year's is necessary for the realization of full growth. Nebraska and Oklahoma yields are short of expectation.

Winter-wheat threshings maintain earlier reports of good yields.

Spring-wheat threshing is on in the northwest, with much more optimistic reports coming from Minnesota and the Dakotas, though the yields in the latter states are concededly short. Wisconsin yields are better than anticipated, but the potato and hay crops are short. Pastures, except in Iowa, are better as the result of rains. Late crops in the eastern half of the country have been helped by rains, but harvested crops in the fields have been hurt by the wet weather. Fruit crop conditions in the Pacific northwest were never better.

Mrs. Sarah Bathurst, on Thursday last, met with an accident which, while quite painful, might have resulted more seriously to one who is in her eighty-first year. Mrs. Bathurst was removed to the hospital, where her injury was given immediate attention and she soon was resting comfortably.

George Robb fooled us badly, but in a very nice way, several days ago. Walking into "The Republican" office, he held up a small basket, which appeared to be tied up with considerable care, and asked whether we liked snakes. As he talked George proceeded to open the basket and the editor proceeded to make a dash for the front door. When we had reached a safe distance we turned, expecting to see the snake jump out of the basket. To our surprise there stood George with a grin on his face and in his hands a basket of delicious plums and pears. Just to add to the already good measure he produced two fine big sweet apples which he had smuggled into the office in a paper bag. The fruit was a little gift to the editor from George and also his wife. We hope they will have as much fun laughing at how they fooled us as we had in eating the fruit.

Perfectly Simple--Simply Perfect.

This describes the policy of the Royal Union to a nicety. You don't have to be a corporation lawyer to understand it. No ambiguous terms--no useless and technical phraseology. In short a policy that any business man can understand thoroughly, and understanding it, will want to have one on his own life. That is why we want you to look it over. The 20 per cent. allotment feature means just what the name implies--that the Company will "allot" 20 per cent. of the premium yearly in order to reduce the cost. These "allotments" are not the divideuds--they are simply a foretaste of the handsome returns that will be paid when settlement day arrives. They enable you to get definite returns on your premium payments, and the terms thereof are guaranteed to you in advance. Some men say all insurance companies are alike, but Royal Union policy holders say their company is the best in the world and they like to tell their friends about it.
